
Abstract
Museum procedures for the rights and reproduction of works in their collections are diverse. Now, the advent of digitization and its imaging potential via the information super-highway has added another element to the ongoing discussion of these issues. This project began in February 1990 when approximately 230 art museums and galleries, as well as other institutions with significant art holdings, were sent questionnaires requesting information about their rights and reproduction policies. The information in each entry is intended to offer only a general guideline. Such categories as contact title, department, reproduction conditions, and credit line should remain relatively constant.

INTRODUCTION

As slide collection curator and picture researcher for educational video productions at the Amon Carter Museum for thirteen years (1979-1992), I was often in contact with museums across the country, searching for images in a variety of formats and asking for permission to use them.

It was soon apparent that each institution had a different approach to fulfilling my requests. A few museums had rights and reproduction departments. At others, requests went through the photographer's or the registrar's office or, at times, directly to a curator. Although most institutions had separate charges for educational and commercial usage, fee structures for services varied widely. Nearly all museums had policies for traditional print forms (books or periodicals), but few had established distinct procedures for film and video production or other electronic media.

Years have passed, but museum procedures for the rights and reproduction of works in their collections continue to be diverse. Now, the advent of digitization and its imaging potential via the information super-highway has added another element to the ongoing discussion of these issues. Although some major museums are wholeheartedly embracing the new technologies, others have just begun to implement plans for non-print media. In this light, this Guide is offered.

This project began in February 1990 when approximately 230 art museums and galleries, as well as other institutions with significant art holdings, were sent questionnaires requesting information about their rights and reproduction policies. Institutions were selected from The Official Museum Directory, published by the American Association of Museums (AAM). Of the 178 questionnaires mailed at that time, 109 responded and returned requests for updates. The updated information was current as of January 1994. Due to numerous staff fluctuations and reductions over this time period, it has been impossible to continually update these listings in their present printed form.

The information in each entry is intended to offer only a general guideline. Such categories as contact title, department, reproduction conditions, and credit line should remain relatively constant. Some institutions have extremely detailed fee schedules, categories, and reproduction conditions, and it was not possible to include all of this data. Specific information such as fees should be understood to be within a reasonable range. As this Guide was being updated, it was notable that the fees of some institutions have remained the same since the project began, others have increased significantly, and, surprisingly, a few institutions have decreased their charges. In most cases, the fees listed should fall within the current ranges. Finally, it is important to note that additional descriptive information about individual museum collections may be obtained from the AAM's The Official Museum Directory.

The Amon Carter Museum deserves many thanks for providing personnel time and partial funding for this project. Thanks also go to the individuals who have contributed their efforts to this project over the years. In 1990, Deborah Bourse, the last of my full-time slide collection assistants, began the project, setting up the database and following up on information for each entry, and publications assistant Karen Reynolds first proofed these entries. With the departure of the last slide collection assistant, the project languished. Then, in 1993, Amy Petri, a publications department intern, took up the task, updating the entries and providing an overall consistency for the information. In the spring of 1993, Pat Bevan, Slide Curator at Virginia Technical University, proofed the entire manuscript, offering her experience with visual resources along with her recommendations. Jane Posey, the Amon Carter Museum’s assistant editor, made corrections and proofed the updated material. Throughout the project Nancy Schuller, Fine Arts Slide Curator at the University of Texas at Austin, provided encouragement and strength to complete this undertaking.

Collections Information: An illustrated catalogue of the collection (covering acquisitions through 1983-84) is available through the museum shop for $20.00. A new, more selective catalogue is being compiled. A list of slides is available. Slides also are offered through Rosenthal.

Color Formats: 35mm slides (duplicates); 4x5" and some 8x10" transparencies (usually originals); copy photographs.

B&W Formats: 4x5" and 8x10" copy negatives; copy photographs.

Special Services: Photography is done in-house. Works by relatively unknown artists may not be available for reproduction. If an object has not been photographed, new photography may be requested. This takes one month with an additional charge subject to negotiation. No rush orders are accepted. Shipping is via UPS or FedEx, payable by the recipient. Individuals may sometimes arrange to schedule their own photography.

Reproduction Conditions: Cropping is discouraged, and if allowed, requires that the entire image appear elsewhere in the publication. Bleeding, overprinting, and printing on colored stock are not allowed. Permission requests are accepted in writing only. One copy of a publication or clip is required. Color proofs must be submitted prior to publication. Slides may not be used for reproduction. Fees are for one-time use only.

Required Credit Line: Copyright The Phillips Collection, Washington, D.C.

Scholarly or Nonprofit Fees: 35mm slides--$2.50; 4x5" and 8x10" color transparencies--$75.00 (3-month loan); 8x10" B&W photographs--$15.00. Use fees are waived for scholarly publications and nonprofit organizations, e.g. museums and universities.

Commercial Fees: 35mm slides--$2.50; 4x5" and 8x10" color transparencies--$125.00 (3 month loan); 8x10" B&W photographs--$20.00. Standard editorial reproduction fees are $100.00 per language for one-time internal usage. Electronic publishing options are not granted along with print rights, but may be requested separately for each medium.
